In the early afternoon of January 15, 1919, a fifty foot steel tank filled with over two million gallons of molasses collapsed in Boston's North End sending its sticky contents in a fifteen-foot wave through the neighborhood streets. The disaster was blamed on immigrant anarchists and seen by many as proof that the nation was imperiled by Bolsheviks and others. The event knocked the end of World War I and Prohibition out of the headlines.

Bus departs at 9:45 am

Fee: Admission to the museum is free
 This exhibit celebrates and contextualizes Boston College's monumental bronze eagle, a replica of which now appears atop a column on the University's Linden Lane. Revealed during its recent conservation to be a Japanese masterpiece from the Meiji period (1868-1912), the original eagle was donated to Boston College in the 1950s by the estate of diplomat and collector Larz Anderson and his wife, Isabel. Conservation has drawn attention to the eagle's significant fine detail, careful modeling of form and excellence of material construction, inspiring scholars' desire to understand its origins. In the exhibition, bronze, silver and ivory sculptures of birds of prey, folding screens, scroll paintings, netsuke, lacquerware, ceramics and textiles join to bring the history of the stunning Boston College eagle to life.
